PROBLEM #1

Reality: The Earth's atmosphere is heating at a rate faster than any time in history—a phenomenon known as global warming. Glaciers at the North Pole are melting. Sea levels are rising. Storms are intensifying. Heat waves, like the one that swept through Europe last summer, are longer and more deadly. Right now, we are in the middle of an unfolding climate crisis.

The abrupt climate crisis in The Day After Tomorrow is over the top. A full-blown ice age could not happen. But global warming could bring dangerously cold temperatures in some areas, while others suffer severe storms, extreme heat, floods, droughts and water shortages.

Here in the U.S., cars, trucks and coal-fired power plants spew over half of all pollution that causes global warming. But that's not inevitable. Together we can turn it around.

PROBLEM #2

One man stands in the way of real progress toward stopping global warming: President George W. Bush. At every turn, President Bush has sided with his friends and big campaign contributors in the oil, coal and automobile industries.

THE SOLUTION

We have the expertise to make cars run on cleaner burning fuels, and the resources to develop new technologies that will dramatically cut pollution (and create hundreds of thousands of new jobs right here in America).

Go to www.climatecrisis.org and tell President Bush to get serious about global warming. Tell him to support the international Kyoto treaty and support Senator John McCain's new bill in the U.S. Senate to reduce global warming.

Act now. Because we can't wait until the day after tomorrow.
